SUTTON ANTIQUES SHOWN

Works of Homer, La Farge and Vedder to Be Sold This Week at Auction.

Two notable art collections one of paintings, one of furniture—unite in the galleries of the American Art Association to form a display of unusual artistic significance and charm. Both appeal to that native patriotism that seem to have been increased so remarkably during and by the war. The paintings are principally by those American that we are now beginning to call "masters," and the bulk of such foreign pictures as there are are by the artists who career is replete with interest to students, and in everything he undertook his force and character are to be discerned clearly. His enthusiasm for hunting and fishing has been recorded in many splendid canvases, and in them, as in the marines, is seen his implacable desire to arrive at the dramas of nature by the facts of his personal experience. The present picture has all the usual ruggedness of painting and an unexnly genius can supply.

Among the Barbizon examples is emarkable drawing in pastel of a dead tree trunk by Jean François Millet. It is masterly from every point of view. is masterly from every point of the dead tree springs from a bleak hillside covered with tufts of dried grasses and in the back is a leafless wood. The drawing is nervously allve in every part. The pencil of Jean Francols followed every indentation of the ground with religious fidelity, yet no tetalls protrude. The composition is as tonishingly right. With this drawing may be grouped the important "Ville d'Avray," by Corot, and a sober and d'Avray," by Corot, and a sober and rich river view by Daubigny.

UNDERTAKERS,

The Value of a Smile By DR. BERTHOLD A. BAER

"Adversity is sometimes hard on a man, but for one man who can stand prosperity there are one hundred who will stand adversity," says Carlyle.

Nowhere is the truth of this more apparent than at The Funeral Church, Broadway at 66th Street, where every day men and women of all vogues of life ask Frank E. Campbell to take care of a dear one just

"When I entered your building to arrange for the funeral of my dear husband," said Mrs. D. to Mr. Campbell, "I was on the verge of collapse. I expected to come into a cold edifice, see men in sombre garb, hear stereotyped words of consolation from strange lips and to be led into a little chapel without sunshine and hope.

"Instead, I find beauty everywhere; nothing cold, nothing sombre. The rooms homelike and full of comfort, for the dead as well as for the living; the men real men and the women just women. If it did not sound sacrilegious, I would say I feel happy in the thought that my darling is so well taken care of."
"If your institution did nothing more than that,"

said Mrs. D.'s brother, "take the fear from a woman's heart and implant there hope and contentment; if it did nothing else than bring a smile upon suffering lips, you have fulfilled your mission."

Mr. Campbell is not satisfied, for who is satisfied with what he has done stands but small chance of being appreciated for what he will do.

Mr. Campbell receives many letters of thanks and appreciation, which he cherishes highly. What he cherishes most, however, is the value of a smile brought upon trembling lips by service well rendered.

have gained completest franchise in this country—the leafers of the Barbison school. The furniture is exclusively of the lovely examples of craftsmanship associated with the best traditions hore. The element of chance has had nothing to do with these collections, both coming from amateurs who spent years of intelligent effort in rounding them out. The paintings under discussion are owned by Mrs. Roland C. Lincoin; the furniture by Mrs. Eben Satton of Baltimore.
